

PRESS RELEASE 19th MAY 2011

From the Campaign to Help Find Ben Needham

Following the announcement that the Prime Minister has stepped in and requested the MET to provide an investigation into the Madeleine McCann case, the mother of Ben Needham, who was abducted whilst on the Island of Kos in Greece in 1991, Kerry Needham-Grist has written a very touching and heartfelt letter to David Cameron.

The letter can be viewed on our campaign website at: <http://www.helpfindben.co.uk/letter-to-pm.html> and the media can download a copy of the letter from our Press page at: <http://www.helpfindben.co.uk/press.html>

Members of the media should feel free to report on this letter. However, as Kerry has stated in her letter to the Prime Minister, she will not be accepting any interviews or making comment until she has received a response from the Prime Minister.

We are thankful to the many members of the public who have been leaving comments on our Facebook page (<http://www.facebook.com/helpfindben>) and on our website (<http://www.helpfindben.co.uk/>) as well as tweeting about it (<http://www.twitter.com/findbenneedham>) showing their support for Kerry and the campaign to find Ben.

I would like to stress that the Needham family are very happy that the McCanns' have been given this boost to their campaign to find Madeleine, and Kerry's letter to the Prime Minister should in no way reflect otherwise. The McCanns certainly deserve such support. However, it is our intention to fight the case that such provisions should be made to ALL, not just to one family of a missing child. Ben Needham has been missing now for coming up to 20 years, and Kerry has never been offered such support, and in fact has been told such support was not possible. What is good for one should be good for all.

Regards,

Scott Morrison
